INTRODUCTION.

Before the development of local government into the representative system, one of the chief devices employed for carrying out those functions of local administration which were not included in the ancient customs of the recognised local institutions was "government by commission." In London there were commissioners for paving, lighting, and watching, and for administration of turnpikes and sewers. Among the more important of these bodies, imposed upon a public which had no voice whatever in their selection and no control over their proceedings, were the several Commissioners of Sewers, exercising jurisdiction over what is now practically the County of London, and some of the adjacent parts. The official documents of these Commissioners are now in the Council's hands, and form, in all, about 4,250 separate volumes, sheets or rolls, of which about 400 are duplicates. Most of the earliest volumes are beautifully written, and the later volumes are also in good condition, while some of the plans and surveys are remarkably well executed.

The records may be summarised as follows :—

1. The minutes of the Surrey and Kent Commissioners of Sewers, comprised in 24 volumes, and, with some discrepancies, covering the period from January, 1569 to 1847; the minutes of the Greenwich Commission, from 1625 to 1847; of the Poplar Commission, from 1629 to 1847; of the Westminster Commission, from 1659 to 1847; of the Tower Hamlets Commission, from 1702 to 1847; of the Holborn and Finsbury Commission, from 1716 to 1847; of the St. Katherine's Commission, from 1782 to 1841; and of the Metropolitan Commission of Sewers, from 1847 to the formation of the Metropolitan Board of Works in 1855.

2. The instruments of appointment of the Westminster Commission, from 1691 to 1847; of Poplar, from 1706 to 1830; of Surrey and Kent, from 1727 to 1847; of St. Katherine, from 1729 to 1847; of Greenwich, from 1810 to 1847; of Holborn and Finsbury, from 1811 to 1847; of Tower Hamlets, from 1811 to 1847; and of the Metropolitan Commission of Sewers, from 1849 to 1854. To some of these the Great Seal is attached.

3. A series of presentments of the jury for work required about the sewers under the jurisdiction of the Westminster Commission of Sewers, from 1668 to 1848; of Holborn and Finsbury, from 1683 to 1684; of Surrey and Kent, from 1746 to 1793; and of St. Katherine, from 1754 to 1821.

4. The rate-books of the Westminster Commission, from 1695 to 1848; of Tower Hamlets, from 1703 to 1847; of Surrey and Kent, from 1723 to 1848; of Greenwich, 1775 to 1808; of Holborn and Finsbury, from 1779 to 1848; and of Poplar, from 1825 to 1845.

5. A large collection of plans relating to drainage, amongst which are several of great interest and rarity.

Many of these documents contain valuable topographical details, and other material for London history, possibly not obtainable from any other source, and on 7th March, 1899, the Council, on the motion of Mr. Sidney Webb, passed the following resolution:—"That, in view of the fact that the Council possesses among its archives many records, dating from the 16th Century, the General Purposes Committee be requested to consider whether any steps can conveniently be taken to publish a selection of such records as are of historical interest." The Committee reported in due course, and on 13th February, 1900, the Council resolved to take steps for the publication of a portion of the records, consisting, it was subsequently decided, of the earliest extant minutes of the Surrey and Kent Commissioners.

Sewers Commissions.

The duties of Sewer Commissions may be conveniently classified in two divisions : (a) preservation of land from inundation ; (b) protection of river navigation.

There are in England large areas which, being below high water mark, were originally marsh-land. By the provision of walls, or embankments, to restrain the inroads of the sea or tidal rivers, and of a complicated system of dykes, etc., to carry away the surface drainage, such districts were reclaimed, but were always liable to disaster from a breach in the embankment or from the blocking up of the watercourses.

The obligation to maintain the system in proper working order devolved, generally speaking, on the individual land owners. Uncontrolled individual action is, however, very unreliable, and a sense of the grave consequences of any dereliction of duty gave rise, in at least one instance, to an efficient controlling organisation.

In the account* of the intervention of Henry de Bathe in the disputes of the inhabitants of Romney Marsh in the reign of Henry III., there is revealed such an organisation, whereby twenty-four jurats looked after the safe-keeping of the marsh, giving judgment as to necessary repairs in the banks and walls, and distraining on defaulters. This arrangement seems to have worked so well that, in the reign of Edward I., a similar arrangement was authorised* for the rest of Kent "as well by the sea coast, as bordering on the Thames and other waters, in which the marsh-lands are subject to inundation."

Owing, however, to the neglect of private individuals, either on their own initiative or on that of such an organisation as is above alluded to, to maintain their defences, catastrophes sometimes occurred. On these occasions, or when the condition of the banks was such as to render a breach probable, special commissioners were appointed by the King to view the banks, ascertain who were responsible, and provide for the repair of the damage. Many instances of such commissions dealing with the district afterwards under the control of the Surrey and Kent Sewers Commission are mentioned by Dugdale.†

In the meantime attention had been paid to that part of the later sewer administration which dealt with the protection of river navigation. Magna Carta contains a provision enforcing the removal of "all weirs . . . . out of the Thames and the Medway, and throughout all England, except upon the sea coast." Special steps were also taken to remedy particular grievances. Thus in 1227 by letters patent, justices were appointed to view and amend, with the help of knights and freemen of each county, all the weirs on the Thames raised or heightened since John's last visit to Ireland. From the reign of Edward III. onwards a series of statutes was passed‡ dealing with this branch of sewer administration.

In 1427 occurs the first mention of the appointment of Sewers Commissions, due in this case to an unusually violent manifestation of the "rage of the sea flowing and re-flowing" over Lincolnshire and other parts of the country. According to the Act (6 Henry VI. c. 5) passed on this occasion the selected Commissioners were to be entrusted with powers of (a) survey, (b) enquiry by jurors, (c) distraint, and (d) legislation by ordinance, according to the precedent of the laws and customs of Romney Marsh. The oversight and repair of bridges and weirs were included in the powers granted them.

During subsequent years a series of Acts was passed, introducing new Commissions with trifling modifications.

In 1531 was passed the Act 23 Henry VIII., c. 5 (The Bill of Sewers), which consolidated the provisions of its predecessors, and remained for three centuries the chief statute on the subject. The dual nature of sewer administration is well brought out in the preamble, which sets forth that the king "nothing earthly so highly weighing as the advancing of the common profit, wealth and commodity of this his realm, considering the daily great damages and losses which have happened . . . as well by the reason of the outrageous flowings, surges and course of the sea, ... as also by occasion of landwaters and other outrageous springs . . . and over that, by and through mills, milldams, weirs . . . . and other impediments, in and upon . . . rivers and other watercourses . . . hath . . . ordained, established and enacted, that commissions of sewers, and other the premises, shall be directed . . . to such substantial and indifferent persons as shall be named by the Lord Chancellor and Lord Treasurer of England, and the two Chief Justices, for the time being, or by three of them, whereof the Lord Chancellor to be one." The Commissioners were "to survey the . . . wells, streams . . . gates, calcies, bridges, trenches, mills, milldams, . . . and other impediments and annoyances" and cause the same to be "made, corrected, repaired, amended, put down or reformed"; to enquire by jurors who were responsible; "to tax, assess, charge, distrain and punish" offenders; to reform, repair and amend the said walls, ditches, etc., and renew the same; to cleanse and purge the trenches, sewers, etc., and remove all annoyances; to appoint officers; to distrain for arrears of money assessed and to levy fines, etc.; to take at reasonable wages or price labourers, horses, carts, implements and other necessaries; to make statutes and ordinances; to hear suits; to award writs and precepts to sheriffs, bailiffs and others. The sheriffs were to summon such jurors as were required. A form of oath was prescribed for the Commissioners to take: their qualifications as regards estate*, their fees, and the wages of their officers were stated. A Commission was to last three years and the Act was to continue in force for twenty years.

The Act 3 and 4 Edward VI., c. 8 made the above statute perpetual and prescribed the duration of a Commission as five years, a period extended by 13 Eliz., c. 9 to ten years, which statute also provided that the Commissioners' orders, etc., might continue for one year subsequent to the expiry of the Commission.

Surrey and Kent Sewers Commission.

This brings us to the period covered by the Minutes of the Surrey and Kent Sewers Commission in the possession of the London County Council. Originally the Minute-Book seems to have commenced with the year 1557, but the Minutes extant date from the beginning of 1569.

The present volume contains a transcription of the Minutes of the first two Commissions, whose records exist, dating from 1569 to 1579.

The actual forms of Commission are no longer in

* As "having lands, tenements or other hereditaments in fee simple, fee tail, or for term of life, to the clear yearly value of 40 marks above all charges to his own use, except he be resiant and free of any city, borough or town corporate, and have movable substance of the clear value of £100, or else he be . . . . an utter barrister."

existence, and consequently the names of those appointed to act can only be gathered from the lists of those present at the various meetings. From this source it would seem that the first Commission consisted of fourteen, and the second of twenty-four members, seven being common to both. In the first Commission were four knights—Sir W. Garrard, Sir T. Offley (the "Zacchæus of London"*), Sir W. Chester, and Sir Chris. Draper, all of whom had passed the chair of mayoralty. Thos. Bromley (afterwards Sir Thos. Bromley), the Recorder of the City of London, and afterwards Lord Chancellor, was a member. Three others were prominent officials: Barnard Randolphe, the Sergeant of the City; Benjamin Gunston, the Treasurer of the Admiralty; Thomas Taylor, one of the Queen's Surveyors. The remainder were important local landowners. In the second Commission, of the above five civic dignitaries only one (Sir Thomas Offley) is left, but with him are associated two past Lord Mayors—Sir William Allen and Sir Rowland Hayward; William Fleetwood, Recorder of the City; James Bacon, Alderman, uncle of Francis Bacon; and William Halstoke, who, during the existence of the Commission, became Comptroller of the Navy and Admiral of the Narrow Seas.

The district under the Commissioners' jurisdiction extended from the river Ravensbourne to Putney Church.† The greater portion of this area lies very low, a considerable proportion of it being actually below high water mark, and were it not for the maintenance of the Thames riverwall (then one of the duties of the Commissioners) scarcely a year would pass even now, but on the occasion of unusually high tide nearly the whole of the central portion would be submerged.

* Fuller, Worthies of England, page I. 191.

† Subsequently the western boundary was moved to East Moulsey.

The appearance of the district at the time with which this volume deals was very different to that which it now presents. On the whole sparsely peopled, it consisted chiefly of flat, open country, stretching to the foot of the Surrey hills, intersected by open streams and ditches crossed by many bridges. At times of heavy rain or after the break-up of frosts, large tracts were covered with water, which would often remain for weeks. The drainage, which was entirely on the surface, was effected by means of the "sewers" which, with winding course and generally sluggish movement, emptied into the Thames.

The Court met in the Court House in Southwark, generally at 8 a.m. According to the terms of the Statute of Henry VIII., six members had to be present, but as a matter of fact on some occasions it would appear that business was carried on when only five appeared (see e.g. p. 192). The Court was also adjourned if the prescribed number of the quorum was not present (1080).

The officers of the Court were :—

(a) Two bailiffs, one for Kent and the east part of Surrey, and one for the west part of Surrey. Their duties consisted in serving the warrants, precepts, etc., of the Commissioners.

(b) Two collectors for the same districts. These officials had to receive and pay to the expenditor the money levied for repairs, etc.

(c) An expenditor, whose duty was to expend, on the carrying out of the various works, the money handed out by the collectors.

(d) A clerk, who (533) "in consideracone of his attendance and travelle" is granted £4 a year salary.

(e) Two surveyors were appointed (263-4) "to pervse survay and se from time to time yf the defaults presented by the Jurye or to be presented be or shall be made repaired and performed accordinglye duringe the plesure of the Courte."

(f) A walreve is first mentioned among the officers elected in the Court of 20th April, 1571. Subsequently the holder of that office is found acting as bailiff for the east part of Surrey and Kent, and the Court (533) ordered that the wages of the "walreve or bayliff for the east parts of Surrey and Kent" should be 4 marks a year.

A special staff might be appointed to deal with a particular work, e.g. in the case of the repair of St. Thomas a Watering's Bridge (995).

The business of inquiring into the state of the sewers, etc., was performed by juries supplied by the Sheriff for the purpose in the various districts, East Surrey, West Surrey and Kent, and, at least on some occasions, for Southwark. It was their business to meet at certain places and times, according to the summons of the foreman, to make a progress (844) through the neighbourhood, take a view of the sewers, etc., and make presentments of the repairs needed and of the persons who ought to carry them out.

In certain cases special steps seem to have been taken to ascertain who were responsible. Thus in connection with the Boar's Head Sluice (376) a special jury not on the ordinary panel was appointed; and for a view of St. Thomas a Watering's Bridge (989) the two juries were allowed to co-opt certain inhabitants of the townships involved. They could also hear evidence and summon witnesses (see e.g. 599 and 683).

At the order of the Court the persons presented were warned by the bailiff to execute the work by an appointed day under penalty, and the jury was required again to view the places to see whether the repairs had been carried out. For neglecting to take this second view, the foreman and jurors of East Surrey were fined 20s. and 10s. each respectively (266), of which, however, they were subsequently only required to pay 2s. and 1s. each (275). Non-attendance on the part of a juror at a Court to which he had been summoned rendered him liable to a fine.

An interesting fact is the discharge (357) of Edmund Sculles from the jury because of "the greate attendance that he is faine to use to his pacientes by professinge the arte of Surgery for the curinge of the fistula."

In cases where mistakes were alleged to have been made by the jury in their presentment, the aggrieved party appeared in Court and "shewed his cause." If he were judged to be right, the Court "traversed" the former judgment (e.g. 498). If the case were disputed the complainant was required to appear with his "evidences and counselle." If after the cause had been argued and debated the Court was yet unable to come to a decision, certain of the Commissioners would be appointed to view the "premises" and report, and on that report judgment would be given (see e.g. 683).

It would occasionally happen that, in order to secure the execution of necessary repairs, distraint had to be made. The distress seems to have been kept from two to six days (148 and 315) and then sold. The story of how William Legard defiantly carried off the distress and "cam into the Courte and arrogantly toke upon him to correct and allso to teache the Commissioners their duties" (a proceeding which cost him £5) is set forth in full detail (114-5).

The jury were required to make a presentment of the number of acres of land and the means of every owner, occupier or farmer within the circuit they deemed chargeable, and according to the list thus made the rate was fixed. Difficulties would occasionally arise with reference to ownership. In the case of the Wynterborne sewer the jury expressly declare themselves incapable of deciding questions of this kind "by reason that we are sworne for the good oversyghte and levyenge to and for the Scorynge of Sewers rather than for the tryall and tythe of lande."

The repair of a wall in Church Marsh was dealt with in a special way. The owner of the adjoining land having refused to undertake the repairs, the work was done by means of a temporary loan raised from the Marsh dwellers, and the Court appointed trustees to intercept the offending land owner's rents until the amount had been made up.

An illustration of the difficulties experienced in raising money on a large scale is afforded by the case of the Duffield Sluice. The case is first mentioned (92) in April, 1569, when the Court is told that the sluice and the Thames wall up to Arnold's Mill "ys in greate ruyne and decaye," but it was not until July, 1574, that the whole of the money required for the wall had been collected (718). In a general statement made in January, 1578, the cost of repairs is given as £137 8s. 3d.

Equal difficulty was found in collecting the fines imposed on individuals presented. A special precept for their levy was occasionally issued (e.g. 315).

On two occasions (28th March, 1569, and 9th June, 1571) the Court sat as a Court of "moderatione misericordiarum," when persons by pleading poverty and other reasons were relieved of a portion of their fine.

This volume contains practically an exact transcript of the entries relating to the first two Commissions, the minutes of whose proceedings are extant. Extensions are in all cases indicated by italics. The actual presentments are, however, somewhat abbreviated by the omission of words or phrases common to all or several, and such omissions are represented by dots.

The contents of this volume alone will show what a wealth of topographical information is contained in these records, and from this point of view, as well as because of the insight which they give us into the working of an obsolete form of local government, the publication of further extracts would seem desirable. At the same time, however, with the contents of the present volume as a guide, it would probably not be necessary in future volumes to transcribe the extracts in such detail, and it seems likely that a résumé of the information given, without, save in exceptional circumstances, the formulæ in which it is contained, would suffice.
